

Can you find the missing letters? (answers)

My friend Jatty and I decided to enter the school public speaking competition. The topic was, 'It is inexcusable to be miserable', which was an entirely suitable subject for two happy people like us to discuss.

We thought it would be advisable to write a script first. We were both capable debaters, but we thought it would be sensible to practise in case we made some terrible mistake. The trouble was, the more serious and responsible I tried to sound, the more impossible I found it to stop giggling.

Jatty was not helping. She was in full debating mode. 'Presumably you think that if you are laughing uncontrollably the judges will be reasonably likely to think you agree with the motion,' she intoned. 'This might be true, but it is possibly a good idea to make a few useful points in between giggles.'

'You are probably right,' I spluttered, my shoulders visibly shaking.
