

Geography Home Learning—Week 13

Below you will find two very different world maps. The first is a map that was produced during the Tudor period. The other is a modern-day world map.

Activity:

Compare the two. If you can, print them so they are side-by-side as this might make it a little easier. Don't worry if you can't though.

- What do you notice about the countries they both have?
- Are the countries the same shape/size on both maps?
- Which areas have changed the most /least?
- Can you read some of the countries' names? Are they the same?
- What do you notice about the lines on the maps?

How you present your findings is completely up to you. You could either label each picture, create a table with similarities and differences, or just write them up as a list of bullet points.

Tudor World Map

Modern World Map

